Michigan State University Press is particularly proud of its fall 2006 list of new titles and we invite you to review this selection of new scholarship that underscores our mission to advance knowledge and transform lives. As the scholarly publishing arm of America's premier global land-grant university, we call your attention to our exciting frontlist titles, in particular Casablanca and Other Stories by the celebrated Argentine writer Edgar Brau. Brau's work has been compared favorably with that of Edgar Allen Poe, Jorge Luis Borges, and Gabriel García Marquez.

Marouf A. Hasian's Rhetorical Vectors in National and International Holocaust Trials is a timely contribution to the Press's award-winning Rhetoric & Public Affairs Series. Routes of Passage: Rethinking the African Diaspora, edited by the late Ruth Sims Hamilton, is a long awaited collection of important scholarship on the dispersal of African peoples worldwide.

Our catalogue also contains a small sampling of fine publications from our distribution partners, including the third volume of Thorkild Hansen's classic trilogy, Islands of Slaves. This work is now available for the first time in English through our partnership with African Books Collective, Oxford. For a comprehensive list of African-published scholarship and literature visit our website.

This year, we also celebrate the many contributions to American Indian scholarship made by University of California Riverside's Clifford Trafzer. After founding the American Indian Series, formerly named the Native American Series at MSU Press in 1996, he served as its senior editor for a decade. This year, Cliff is stepping down and MSU's Gordon Henry will be taking his place. The Press is proud of its close association with both of these fine scholars. Among our fall releases that focus on American Indians and Native Peoples you will find: Basil H. Johnston's Anishinaubae Thesaurus, Ambiguous Justice: Native Americans and the Law in Southern California by Vanessa Ann Gunther, and I Will Fear No Evil: Ojibwa-Missionary Encounters Along the Berens River, 1874-1940 by Susan E. Gray.

As MSU Press approaches the ripe old age of sixty in 2007, we believe that our titles remain fresh, up-to-date, and "cutting edge." For a comprehensive look at what MSU Press is doing, visit our website at www.msupress.msu.edu. Check it out!
