To Be the Main Leaders of Our People
A History of Minnesota Ojibwe Politics, 1825-1898

Rebecca Kugel

In 1868, upper Mississippi Ojibwe villages were relocated to a new reservation more than 100 miles to the west. Publicly, the Indians appeared to embrace their move, a conversion to Christianity, and a new agrarian lifestyle. However, there were deep and bitter political divisions that shaped Ojibwe society for several generations. Notes, photographs, maps, index.

We Are Not Savages
Native Americans in Southern California and the Pala Reservation, 1840-1920

Joel R. Hyer

Hyer traces the history of the California Indians - Cupeños, Luiseños, and Kumeyaays- and recounts how the federal government ultimately forced more than one hundred Indians to the Pala Reservation. He also examines the diverse and complex methods the U.S. government used to Americanize these Indians. Hyer's sympathetic account offers new insight into such issues as Indian health and education, acculturation, and cultural persistence. Notes, illustrations, bibliography, index.
